It is not clear why you are confused (we don't know the specific question you want to know). Suppose, you may be confused with other medical courses.

It depends upon your choice, interest, feasibility, preparedness etc. If you want to be a graduate in medicine there are other courses which are already popular like MBBS. BDS etc. There are other courses related to Siddha, Unani Naturopathy, Yoga, Homeopathy, Chinese Medicine, Tibetan Medicine etc. Any course is equally good. After all you can serve people from any type of course you learn. BAMS was not known anywhere, but it is now becoming popular. BAMS gives you working knowledge of Ayurvedic medicine and modern medicine. We think BAMS is good. You can do any courses anywhere. Still you can learn Ayurveda. Yoga et. can use tem in your requirements, taking help from 'trustworthy and registered' center-practitioner. There are scholarships and payment/donation seats in ministry. TU/IOM. Indian Embassy and other national and international universities/medical-collages for medical courses. There are seats for payment in BAMS colleges too, besides some subsidized seats (which are known as scholarships as per merit list published after entrance exam). We know that the college which run BAMS still need to fulfill some requirements like physical infrastructures and human resources, however they are maintaining a sort of standard somehow. This is true in case of other colleges which run other medical course.
